

The Naval Families Federation (NFF) was established in 2003.

We offer Royal Naval and Royal Marines' families an independent voice and representation. We also provide support and guidance on the issues affecting daily life that occur due to being part of a Naval Service family.

The impact of separation and mobility on Naval Service families can present challenges not commonly experienced in Civvy Street. The NFF represents the views of families at the highest level, ensuring that the unique challenges they face are considered in the tri-Service arena and when policies are reviewed.

The NFF is led by Anna Wright, our Director. Anna is supported by the Head Office team, based in Portsmouth, and our Regional Liaison Team, who are positioned in key locations around the country.

REGIONAL LIAISON TEAM

The Regional Liaison Team provides a local connection between the Naval Service, their families and those organisations that have a remit to support them, such as local authorities, government departments and the charitable sector. Our job is to raise the profile of the Naval Service community across the country and improve awareness of Service life and the unique challenges we can often face. We also want to see how, and where, the Armed Forces Covenant is working to remove disadvantage for families.
